Uplogix Gains $10M For Network Management

By Scott Denne

4/2/2008

Uplogix Inc., a provider of remote network management, has secured $10 million in Series C financing.

Citigroup Inc. and other new, undisclosed strategic investors provided the funding. The round also included participation from existing investors Adams Capital Management and Fayez Sarofim & Co., according to Tom Goldman, the company's chief executive. Goldman declined to disclose the company's valuation.

When Adams Capital first invested in Uplogix in its $7 million Series B round two years ago, Uplogix was "essentially a pre-revenue company," said Martin Neath, a general partner at the firm. But the company has since gained traction with customers in retail, financial services, energy and education, in which numerous remote locations are involved and there is not enough infrastructure to manage them, he said.

Most of the company's sales have come from North America. The proceeds of the new round will be used to expand into the Pacific Rim and Europe, said Goldman, who anticipates this round will bring the company to profitability.

Other start-ups in the network management space include Dorado Software Inc., which is backed by Insight Venture Partners; and Voyence Inc., which was bought by EMC Corp. in October.

This round brings the total capital raised by Uplogix to $20.6 million. The Austin, Texas-based company has 62 employees and will not make any changes to its board of directors, Goldman said.
